MILANO CHOW

There hasn't been enough time or distance to consider how my life has been affected by Trump's presidency. I don't feel like an immediate target—(say, compared to someone who's undocumented or someone who depends on social services).

For me, the most immediate issue is the GOP healthcare bill, especially after navigating the US healthcare system this year (and that's with the ACA still in effect). I can't understand why some politicians frame health as an individual responsibility or healthcare as a consumer product.

There were dynamics in place before this administration that affected my peers. Unstable employment, rising rent from real estate speculation, student debt, inaccessible healthcare Now these pressures feel heightened with under a presidency with an agenda of deregulation and privatization.

I chose these images because they represent having faith in the belief that business solutions for can fix social problems, and the co-option of politics by marketing. ===
